Asentinel receives government compliance for software

Asentinel, a Memphis software development company, has been awarded a federal government contract stating that its patent-pending telecom expense management software package is General Services Administration compliant.

The GSA is the business manager and purchasing agent for the U.S. government. Each year, it purchases billions of dollars worth of goods and services for federal agencies from GSA approved vendors. GSA establishes long-term government-wide contracts with commercial firms to provide access to supplies and services.

"This GSA contract award proves Asentinel's ability to realize significant ROIs for government agencies," says David Perdue, president of Asentinel. "Asentinel's ability to provide a central repository for all telecom expenses, while saving government agencies time and money, is attractive at all levels of government."
